

A bright new era for Winder

After some six months of ownership by its new management team, Winder Electrical is making great strides with its many customers worldwide. The company anticipates that the next 12 months will see a period of expansion with the continuation of strong relationships with its existing customers and the development of new outlets for all its products and services.

Winder Electrical has enjoyed a long and successful trading history stretching back over 100 years and has a healthy forward order book. With the added impetus of a young and enthusiastic team, the company is poised to grow strongly in the coming years.

Under the management team of Chairman Richard Asquith, General Manager Paul Matthews and Operations Director Andy Pinkney, Winder Electrical has recently completed several prestigious contracts where the company's combination of engineering excellence and commitment to customer service has been crucial.

Key customers such as Birse - Channel Tunnel rail link, Northern Ireland Electricity, Scottish and Southern Energy, Yorkshire Water and other prestigious companies both in the UK and worldwide have all benefited from Winder Electrical's expertise.

The company is determined to build on its success into the future and is embarking on a programme to work closely with its customers to provide an even better service. Richard Asquith explains: "We are committed to positioning Winder Electrical as the best service provider in its sector. A key element in this initiative is the need for clear and regular dialogue with our customer base to ensure that our shared objectives are being met."

"Two way communication and the maintenance of excellent relationships with our customers and supply partners is absolutely essential and we will be looking at several new initiatives to drive this forward over the coming months."
